"Then, by the process of elimination, we take up everybody who might, by any possible straining, be considered as having a motive for murdering Brooks, and we are forced to drop every one of them. We cannot discover that anybody else figured with him so intimately as did this girl; that anybody else had ever threatened him; that anybody else had any possible reason for wanting to put him out of the way.

"Everything narrows down to the girl. She had a motive, and she could have committed the crime, for she was at the Glen Island Hotel with him and in the room with him. It is not reasonable to suppose that anybody else committed the crime, because there is no way of figuring out how any one else."

tracing her movements that afternoon, and while I am not prepared to say just what we found out. I will say that we will be able to account for every move she and Brooks made from the time they left his office until they reached the Glen Island Hotel.

"There is a great deal of evidence concerning the past life of the girl in our possession that I cannot make public now, but it is of a character to show that she is not a girl who could be considered as backward. In reality, the flood of information that has come to us concerning her is surprising."
